General Woodland Description

This forested property is a mix of upland eastern hardwoods that lies in the Appalachian & Allegheny Plateaus. These common hardwood forest types are found along ridge-tops, coves, ravines and along steep slopes that extend through-out the Appalachian Mountains and foothills. Stands are generally characterized by a large number of dominant and co-dominant tree species and by the great diversity of their mixture. The species and their proportions vary considerably because of lack of previous forest management, differing past treatments, earlier timber harvests and/or natural stand disturbances on sites of differing quality, aspect, elevation and latitude.
